Full Itinerary

The Viennese love their coffee, and even Freud was known to linger over a mélangé, a Viennese blend (similar to a cappuccino). Take a master class in coffee-making with a well-known barista where you might learn to make an einspänner, espresso with whipped cream.

Head to Leopoldstadt, allotted to the Jews in the 17th century and their home until Kristallnacht in 1938. Now, Turkish and Balkan immigrants live alongside Orthodox Jews and a young population. Stop at Supersense, a cool café and concept store dedicated to all things vintage and analog. Have a snack as you browse the unique items on offer.

Stop at a vinothek for Viennese wine and talk of Jewish culture, cross the Danube for some beautiful views, and take a behind-the-scenes tour of Vienna's biggest and most impressive synagogue, Stadttempel. It was the only synagogue to survive World War II, and its unassuming facade hides a magnificent interior.

Next, head to the district of Freihausviertel, bypassed by many visitors and even some Viennese, but becoming a thriving bohemian sector. Discover why the beisl, Vienna's take on a bistro, is a mainstay of the city's culture.

By now we'll be entering the afternoon, a perfect time to stroll to an Austrian beer garden or two. At a neighborhood favorite, Silberwirt, savor Viennese beer and perhaps a hearty goulash.
